

Tinnitus

Hi I'm Dr. Virginia Feldman a partner with ENT and Allergy Associates, who works out of the Middletown, NY office. Today we're going to talk about tinnitus. Tinnitus is when you get a certain auditory perception of a sound that is not really there. It can be a humming, a buzzing, a whistling. It can take the shape of many different sounds but it's basically when you hear something in your ear that's not there. Often it happens in both ears but sometimes it can happen in just one ear and we all get it sometimes for a brief second every now and then that's okay. But if you get noise or buzzing or some kind of sound in your ear that remains, then it is very important that you seek out medical attention and see an ear nose and throat doctor. Often we will get a hearing test; even though you might not be perceiving any hearing loss, it is often related to hearing loss and the hearing test also allows us to figure out why you're having this noise in your ear. So, if you're having it consistently do seek out an ear, nose, and throat doctor.
